Dear friends of Good Samaritan Hospital,

We have many exciting developments to share with you since our last issue of Good News. Within the pages that follow, you will meet two individuals who have a rich history with Good Sam and whose continued support of the hospital has made an indelible impact: Dr. J. Carroll Ramseyer and Jane Palmer. Dr. Ramseyer is a retired neurologist whose 30-year practice forever changed the hospital. His generosity through Partners in Health has supported the hospital’s technological advancements, Heart and Vascular Center and more. As the daughter of Dr. John Vruwink, a distinguished obstetrician and gynecologist who spent his career at Good Sam, Ms. Palmer has deep ties to the hospital. She recently made a planned estate gift dedicated to Good Sam’s Mother and Baby Care campaign. We are incredibly grateful to both Dr. Ramseyer and Ms. Palmer for their enduring support of the hospital.

In keeping with our guiding mission—A Tradition of Caring—Good Samaritan recently opened its Medical Pavilion, Radiation Oncology facility and Frank R. Seaver Ambulatory Surgery Center. Together, these state-of-the-art facilities enhance Good Sam’s ability to provide affordable, specialized medical care for downtown residents and the local business community; to stimulate the local economy by adding over 600 new jobs; to establish a network of 110 additional physicians for patient treatment; and to serve as an important training ground for the next generation of health care professionals.

We wish to express our deepest gratitude to our community of supporters both inside and outside of the hospital. Your generosity of time and resources is what makes Good Sam’s excellence and impact possible. We are so pleased to share this Good News with all of you.

Very truly yours,

Andrew B. Leeka
President and Chief Executive Officer

Charles T. Munger, Chairman of the Board of Trustees and Andrew B. Leeka, President and Chief Executive Officer
Retired Good Samaritan neurologist Dr. J. Carroll Ramseyer has made an indelible impact on the hospital, his field, and the future of patient care.

Raised in Oskaloosa and Des Moines, Iowa, Dr. Ramseyer earned his medical degree from the University of Iowa in 1957. He spent three years in the U.S. Air Force Medical Corps neurology and psychiatry service at Andrews Air Force Base in Washington, D.C. Dr. Ramseyer’s medical training continued with a three-year neurology residency at the Los Angeles VA Center and UCLA, including positions at the Los Angeles VA Center and Long Beach VA Hospital. In 1967, he made Good Samaritan Hospital his permanent home for his practice. He climbed the ranks throughout his 30-year career and retired in 1997.
Retired Good Samaritan neurologist Dr. J. Carroll Ramseyer has made an indelible impact on the hospital, his field, and the future of patient care.
Reflecting on his time at Good Samaritan, Dr. Ramseyer says, “I was very pleased throughout my neurology career to be associated with Good Samaritan and the excellent physicians who practice there....”

My colleagues were all such wonderful practitioners and wonderful people; I don’t believe I could have been happier at any other hospital.

The start of Dr. Ramseyer’s practice coincided with the golden age of neurology and neuroscience. With post-WWII technological advancements, the field expanded its focus from diagnostic to include treatment, too. One of these technological advancements was the CT scanner. At the time, CT scanners had only just become commercially available and they were prohibitively expensive. But their promise—to help doctors more effectively diagnose and treat patients—was too great for Dr. Ramseyer and neurosurgeon Dr. Frederick Pitts to dismiss. Together with Good Samaritan’s five radiologists, they collectively pledged funds to underwrite half the cost of a CT scanner. As a result, Good Samaritan Hospital had the first CT scanner west of the Mississippi installed in 1974. This non-invasive imaging machine attracted patients from all over the western United States. The CT scanner provided much more accurate diagnoses of strokes, vascular malformations, brain tumors, traumatic brain injuries, and blood clots often leading to timely, sometimes lifesaving, surgical and/or medical therapy. At the same time, improved medical treatments for conditions such as epilepsy, Parkinson’s disease and certain neuromuscular disorders were being developed.

“Neurology was a very rewarding specialty to be involved with in those years,” says Dr. Ramseyer.

While technological advancements made up the foreground of Dr. Ramseyer’s professional life, a tumultuous political climate was the background. 1968 is considered by many to be the year that shattered the nation; unfortunately, Dr. Ramseyer felt the nation’s pain too well. On June 4, 1968, Dr. and Mrs. Ramseyer watched on TV presidential candidate and New York Senator Robert F. Kennedy give an inspiring speech at the Ambassador Hotel in Los Angeles. Earlier that evening, he had been declared the winner in the South Dakota and California presidential primaries. At 2:30 a.m. Dr. Ramseyer received a call from a friend that Kennedy had been shot and taken to Good Samaritan Hospital. That day was one of the longest and most devastating for Dr. Ramseyer who, as a neurologist, was tasked with monitoring Kennedy’s electroencephalogram until he died a 1:44 a.m. on June 6.

“We had been so impressed by his speech the night before and thought that if he were nominated for president, we would have likely voted for him. To hear what had happened to him was devastating,” says Dr. Ramseyer.

Kennedy’s brain injury was so severe that even today’s technology could not have saved him. “It was truly a difficult moment to be part of. I often wonder what the course of history would have been had he not been assassinated and had won the presidential election.”

This past June, Good Samaritan honored Kennedy with a memorial event commemorating the 50th anniversary of his death. The Rev. Michael S. Bell, Episcopal chaplain, led a service at which former Los Angeles city council member and longtime friend of the hospital Tom LaBonge also spoke. Dr. Ramseyer was there, too.

Giving back to the hospital became a longstanding commitment for Dr. Ramseyer. He joined Partners in Health (PIH), Good Samaritan’s physician donor group. Over the years Dr. Ramseyer has directed funds to the Heart and Vascular Center, whose patients are often also under the care of neurology, as well as to hospital programs and critical needs. Since its inception, PIH has raised more than $3.5 million in funding for the hospital’s programs, services, specialized departments and critical needs. Dr. Ramseyer believes that paying it forward is not just the right thing to do, but also a smart investment. “As a doctor, your income is only possible if you have the great facilities of the hospital to support your practice. Giving back is a good investment in yourself,” he says.

Dr. Ramseyer’s wife, Jane Eloise Ramseyer, is a trailblazer in her own right. She received her bachelor’s in nursing from the University of Iowa. She became a full time floor nurse at Cedars-Sinai Medical Center in 1976 when the hospital opened in its current location. While working, she obtained her master’s degree in public administration at Cal State University Consortium and was later promoted to Chief Nursing Officer. She retired from Cedars-Sinai in 1996.

In their retirement, the Ramseys travel the world (they’ve visited 50 countries) and enjoy spending time with their children and grandchildren.
Remembering Good Sam in the 40s

Jane Vruwink Palmer (right) with childhood friend
At 91 years old, Jane Vruwink Palmer still vividly remembers the childhood days she spent at Good Samaritan Hospital. Her father, Dr. John Vruwink, was a distinguished obstetrician and gynecologist at the hospital for over 30 years. As a child, Palmer visited the hospital every Sunday while her father went to work. In young adulthood, she landed her first job there as a receptionist.
Dr. Vruwink’s medical career coincided with the Golden Age of Hollywood and Good Samaritan was considered the hospital of the stars.

The coffee shop, All Souls Chapel, the obstetrics office and the maternity ward, all compose the landscape of Palmer’s most prized memories of her father. She can still picture the nursery where, on the best of days, she would peer behind the glass at the swaddled and cooing newborn babies, many of whom her father had delivered.

Dr. Vruwink served many of the Hollywood elite, including actress and inventor Hedy Lamarr and actor Robert Young, who is best known for playing the lead character in TV’s “Father Knows Best.” Dr. Vruwink delivered all four daughters of Young and Betty Henderson.

Palmer’s childhood in Los Angeles was idyllic until the start of World War II when she was 12 years old. The historical moment bookends her young adulthood. She recalls her mother being inspired to buy her a bicycle due to the widespread gas rationing. While she was making post-high school plans to attend school in New York, many of Palmer’s male friends were enlisting.

Her mother, Laura Osman, was a noted writer and motion-picture critic. She died when Palmer was 20, which brought Palmer and her father even closer together. “I worshipped the ground he walked on,” she says. Though she left to New York for finishing school and traveled the European continent, she always came back to Los Angeles County. She eventually settled in South Pasadena.

Dr. Vruwink married twice after Osman. In 1952, he married Elizabeth “Betty” Randolph. Randolph made it her mission to build the reputation and success of Good Samaritan Hospital’s gift shop. In 1959, the Los Angeles Times named her “Woman of the Year” for this very service.
With a lineage devoted to Good Samaritan, it is no surprise that Palmer has made her own indelible mark on the hospital. In 2017 she established a significant estate gift dedicated to Good Samaritan Hospital’s Mother and Baby Care campaign. All gifts to the campaign fund state-of-the-art equipment and renovations to the hospital’s Davajan-Cabal Center for Perinatal Medicine.

Established in 1989, The Davajan-Cabal Center for Perinatal Medicine, affiliated with the USC School of Medicine, is one of Good Samaritan Hospital’s Centers of Excellence. In the past 25 years, more than 100,000 babies have been born in the Center.

Palmer’s legacy gift to the Mother and Baby Care campaign is both a testament to her love for her father—a man who delivered hundreds of babies at the hospital—and to the goodwill she feels for being born at Good Sam herself. “I think Good Samaritan is a great hospital,” she says.
Since 1951, the volunteer members of the Auxiliary have contributed time, energy and funds to the livelihood of Good Samaritan Hospital through a variety of fund-raising and friend-raising events to support vital programs and services at Good Sam. The Auxiliary has consistently focused their support toward the Mother and Baby Care Campaign, the Child Care Center and the Jr. Volunteer Scholarship/Volunteer Department.

We are so pleased to announce the Auxiliary has completed their commitment to Good Sam by raising $100,616 to the hospital’s Mother and Baby Care Campaign. As part of that campaign, the Auxiliary directed $25,616 toward two fetal monitors and $75,000 in support of the overall campaign to renovate postpartum rooms.

Recently, the Child Care Center received an outdoor discovery set for the infant play yard, donated by the Good Samaritan Auxiliary. The structure’s age-appropriate activities aid in children’s large motor skill development and provide an opportunity for children to engage in outdoor play. In addition, the Auxiliary donated $10,000 to our Volunteer Scholarship Program. Six volunteers received scholarships for their post-secondary education.

We thank the Auxiliary for their years of service and their generosity to support our most fragile patients, children and the youth of our community.

On June 12, 2018 more than 100 guests gathered for the opening reception and ribbon cutting ceremony for the Good Samaritan Medical Pavilion.
Standing seven stories high and spanning 197,000 square-feet, the Medical Pavilion was designed by the architectural firm of Ware Malcomb and constructed by Millie and Severson, Inc. and is the newest addition to the hospital’s campus.

The Frank R. Seaver Ambulatory Surgery Center is named after philanthropist and entrepreneur Frank R. Seaver (1883-1964). A Native Californian, Seaver was born in San Jose and spent his formative years in Claremont and Pomona where his father founded the First National Bank of Pomona.

The deep connection between the Seaver family and their hospital, Good Samaritan, goes back to its early history. As the first hospital in the city, Good Samaritan Hospital has been an essential part of the community for generations of the Seaver family. The daughter of Seaver’s nephew and business partner, Richard Carlton Seaver, is Victoria Seaver Dean, the daughter of Seaver’s nephew and business partner, Richard Carlton Seaver.

The Frank R. Seaver Trusts have gifted Good Samaritan Hospital over $22.3 million in the last several decades both to support the Hospital’s new Medical Pavilion, which includes the Frank R. Seaver Ambulatory Surgery Center, and to provide continued support of the hospital’s physicians and services through an endowment.
